His gentle ways hid a burning ambition

M. Ramesh

Chennai, July 29

Back in the mid-1990s, when this correspondent came across GEA Energy Systems, which later morphed into BGR Energy Systems, its turnover was delightfully high, for its class of enterprises — Rs 20 crore!

GEA Energy Systems used to bag Engineering Export Promotion Council awards consistently. Inevitably, when Business Line bumped into the media-shy founder of the company, B.G. Raghupathy, the first impression was surprising.

While the appearance was deceptive, what was not was his burning ambition. It was very clear in the mid-1990s that Raghupathy would not rest until he had achieved something. For long, BGR, a company that supplied 'balance of plant' equipment (equipment in a power plant other than boilers and turbine-generators, such as coal and ash handling systems, electrical systems and civil works), picked up the gauntlet thrown by an NTPC tender to win orders for six turbine-generators, valued in September 2011 at Rs 3,600 crore. A stunned market leader, public sector giant BHEL, then said that it did not need to pick up orders at the throwaway prices quoted by BGR. But later BHEL itself subcontracted two big turnkey jobs to BGR in 1999.

Earlier, in May 2010, BGR Energy had entered into a manufacturing joint venture with Hitachi Power Europe GmbH, to set up two manufacturing plants — for boilers and turbines. Last heard, these plants are suffering time delays. The manufacturing ventures and the Cuddalore power project stand mute testimony to Raghupathy's unfinished agenda.
