Market Scenario

After a prolonged period of severe turbulence the financial markets across the globe have, turned buoyant, auguring well for the Intermediaries. The hope of further revival of the capital markets depends on how fast the recession hit western world's economies recover. Fortunately, early signs are beginning to emerge indicating that at least the worse is behind and the developed markets are beginning to respond to the wide range of stimulus packages being provided by the various central banks across the globe, including our Country too, in coordinated efforts.

It is indeed heartening to note that Indian Markets have successfully de-coupled themselves, to a large extent, and is now emerging strongly as an independent market that holds a lot of promise to the financial and capital market participants. We still have a better growth rates as compared to most other emerging Asian Markets and, India remains a favoured destination for several large Investors and this is good news. The results in general have been encouraging and we expect the market to be buoyant
