Management Discussion and Analysis

Industry Structure and developments

IT Industry continued to grow at a medium pace, not showing the gigantic pace of the late 90s or the slowness of the past 2 years. With the economy showing a positive outlook in the last couple of years, signs of gradual revival are in clear sight. MNCs are outsourcing more in volumes to their Indian counterparts. The initial success of the large MNCs in the offshore outsourcing business has allayed the apprehensions of other mid or large size companies. Companies across verticals and industries are increasingly looking at ways and means to outsource their critical business processes.

There have been pressures on Governments in the first-world countries like USA, UK to frame rules, policies to arrest offshore outsourcing. But, the need to save costs and maximize stakeholder value by offshoring is quite compelling and continues to be on the corporate radar.

Opportunities and Threats

The multimedia and web-publishing business has gradually shifted from the small business enterprise to large companies. With the decline of the Dot-com business worldwide, there has been a substantial erosion of Ecommerce and Ebusiness.

The economy of first-world countries having been opened up, trade barriers having been reduced and exports being promoted in a big way, the large-sized and MNCs are increasingly looking for more and more ways of developing software jointly with cross-cultural teams across the world. Consequently the Indian Software Services business continues to grow and more and more. IT MNC's are moving their software development to India and other offshore destinations.

With the IT MNC's competing for the skilled IT manpower, companies are experiencing an acute shortage of skilled IT professionals. Companies often find it difficult to recruit highly skilled and quality software professionals for urgent project needs. Our company has made extensive plans to leverage this new phenomenon by offering Professional Services to fill the gap of IT manpower experienced by the Indian and MNC companies.

The company plans to have a nationwide presence by opening offices at the IT hubs and at other locations thru Business Partnerships.

Outlook

With the business scenario stabilizing across the globe, resulting in recovery and job creation, the software industry is again on an assured growth path. Software application development outsourcing is becoming increasingly common. The software skill the Indian professional can offer has been recognized all over the world and as such more and more IT MNC's are moving their software development to India and other offshore destinations. Leading Indian IT companies and the MNC's setting up development centers in India are all projecting a robust growth in their requirement of IT professionals.
