'It can't be done!'

These four words have done more for Dollar Industries Limited than any vision or mission statement.

Provoked. Motivated. Graduated.

The results have been heartening.

Even as we belong to a conventional sector, we are recognised as a daring rule-breaker.

Even as we are the youngest among India's front-line innerwear hosiery companies, we are arguably the fastest growing.

Q&A

"Dollar reported profitable growth in a challenging 2015-16"

Q: Were you pleased with the company's working during the year under review?

A: I was delighted for a number of reasons.

One, the company reported record revenues of ₹830 cr corresponded by record profits of ₹26.35 cr, .

Two, the company reported profitable growth while doing so – revenues increased 13.6 per cent but profit after tax strengthened 35.5 per cent.

Three, if you look at the revenue increments of the last two years – ₹40 cr in 2014-15 over the previous year and ₹100 cr in 2015-16 over the previous year – then it becomes evident that we are growing faster the larger we get.

Four, the company reported improving margins – 15.02 per cent EBITDA margin for 2014-15 strengthening to 17.68 per cent in 2015-16.

Q: It would appear that the company's performance was achieved against a favourable industry environment.

A: On the contrary, one of the things that I wish to assure readers is that the company's performance during the year under review was achieved in challenging circumstances.

The country's economy continued to be sluggish beyond what is evident in its GDP growth of 7.6 per cent. This sluggishness translated into a weak offtake of innerwear products from a sectoral perspective. The sector grew 5-7% per cent; Dollar did well by reporting 2.1x sectoral revenue growth.

There was another point that worried industry players. Over the last few years, there was a perspective that as per capita disposable incomes increased, consumers of products in the economy innerwear segment would graduate to the premium segment. Interestingly, we are seeing a divergence – some of the consumers are indeed moving to the value-added segment but on the other hand, the price-sensitive consumers are downtrading towards cheaper options. This divergence is testing the mettle of innerwear brands in responding with corresponding strategy.

Q: How is the company responding to this unforeseen divergence?

A: At Dollar, we believe that the future of our company lies in sustainability. In turn, we believe that sustainability will be reinforced through the ability to evolve our product mix towards the value-added, leaving us with adequate surpluses to reinvest in our brand, vendors, distribution partners and manufacturing assets. This strategy is visibly reflected in our evolving sales mix: from the economy towards the premium and the super premium (prospective).

From this it would appear that the company would like to consciously vacate the economy segment completely. This would not be true; what would be a more accurate picture is that one segment of consumers is moving away from premium products towards the economy segment and within the economy segment they are selecting to buy the cheapest products on offer.

At Dollar, even as we are playing the value game through progressive premiumisation, we are attempting to cater to the economy segment as well. Through various initiatives, we competed price to price with a large number of brands. The result is that our economy segment accounted for 45 per cent of revenues during 2015-16, translating into revenues of ₹360 cr compared with ₹356 cr during the preceding year.

Q: How did the company strengthen its business to address the future?

A: The company did so in various ways.

One of the principal initiatives was that when profits increased, it would have been tempting to play to the gallery and report a short-term spike in profits by keeping brand expenditure at the level of the previous year.

On the contrary, the company did something courageous – when revenues increased, the company concurrently invested a considerably larger amount in brand building, strengthening its capacity to enhance recall and report larger profits across the foreseeable future.

The result was that the increment in brand investment was ₹4.42 cr in 2014-15 over the previous financial year; the increment in brand spending in 2015-16 was ₹23.21 cr during the year under review leading to a total brand spend of ₹72.75 cr – 8.7 per cent of our revenues and possibly one of the highest quantum brand spends in the country's innerwear industry.

We believe that the quantity and quality of this spending will continue to rejuvenate our brand, translating into not just increasing revenues but also increasing revenues of value-added products.

Q: What were some of the other initiatives that strengthened the company's business in 2015-16?

A: The company made a decisive initiative to strengthen its aspirational positioning in 2015-16. For years, there were largely two segments that we addressed – economy and premium. During the last financial year, the company made a decisive initiative; it launched brand Force NXT to address the super premium category. We feel that this extension represents an idea whose time has come for some good reasons. With urban incomes rising, consumers generally moved to higher-priced garments even as they continued to select legacy innerwear brands. There has been a major rethink on the selection of innerwear towards the super premium since; these super premium products are marked by fabric manufactured using superior yarn, stitched using superior thread, cut around contemporary fashion trends and aligned around a superior branding aspiration. Dollar began to address this segment from the second half of the last financial year onwards, the benefits of which will start becoming evident from the current financial year onwards. We believe that this extension represents a watershed in our existence, sending out an unmistakable signal of our desired premium positioning.

Q: What is the outlook for the company during the year under review?

A: We are optimistic of generating ₹1000 cr in revenues in 2016-17 even as challenges of economic slowdown and consumer downtrading remain. The ability to pass on an increase in raw cotton prices should make the achievement of our goal easier in addition to our being able to generate a higher throughput per dealer, address market gaps effectively and increase offtake from our premium and super premium categories. In doing so, we believe that we would be the fastest in our sector to get to this four digit benchmark, emphasising the point that we have always made: Dollar is a different kind of company.

Our robust business model

Vision: In a sector marked by scale, the company resolved to be a contrarian: not the largest with the biggest Balance Sheet but the best integrated hosiery textiles company with the 'smallest' Balance Sheet. This perspective has influenced the company's capital allocation, product mix and realisations strategy, virtually defining the company's personality. The result is that the company expects to remain largely insulated from the margins volatility of the textile sector.

Commitment: The promoters of the company continued to invest in the upstream (manufacturing assets) and downstream (branding) ends of the business even when the company was nascent, convinced as they were of the long-term prospects of value-addition.

Customer focus: The company selected to consciously address the growing needs of the country's youth – through a wider range of products, sizes, styles and colours. The growing proportion of youth who are now young earners, coupled with their willingness to experiment and pay higher for differentiated products, has validated the company's target segment focus.

Brand: The company has progressively evolved from a conventional hosiery products personality (commodity) into premium (value-added). The evolution has made it possible for the company to escape the commodity trap of the economy end and address a growing market for value-added products. The brand effectiveness has been maximized through the consistent engagement of Akshay Kumar, one of the prominent Indian film actors enjoying mass appeal. This brand-led approach has reflected in rising revenues and margins.

Product range: The company has innovated and progressively widened its category spread (from men's innerwear to children's to women's wear; from one season to multi-season) to cover a large proportion of an aspirational family's innerwear requirement, strengthening its recall as a one-stop innerwear products provider. The company increased the number of SKUs, widening choice.
