As a pharmaceutical company, one of our responsibilities as a good corporate citizen is to create awareness in people regarding certain disease conditions, some of them being highlighted below.

HEPATITIS

Hepatitis is an inflammatory condition affecting the liver and is caused by viruses. Hepatitis B virus (HBV) is detected in blood and body fluids (semen, saliva, nasopharyngeal fluids), and it can be transmitted either sexually or by exposure to infected blood or fluids. The four major modes of transmission are sexual contact, mother-to-child transmission at birth, parenteral (blood-to-blood) and through other infected bodily fluids. The primary source of Hepatitis C virus (HCV) transmission is HCV-infected blood or blood products. Other potential sources of HCV transmission include exposure to an infected sexual partner or multiple sexual partners, frequent exposure to infected blood among health care workers, and perinatal exposure.

Hepatitis B virus is probably the most important chronic viral infection affecting Indians. However, despite availability of an effective anti-HBV vaccine, this infection remains a serious threat to public health in India. Hepatitis B virus is the major cause of chronic liver disease and hepatocellular carcinoma. Approximately 4% of the Indian population is estimated to be carriers of HBV. This gives a total pool of approximately 36 million carriers of HBV in India (Risbud A et al. Sex Transm Infec 2002; 78: 169-173).

Hepatitis C is a major health problem due to hepatitis C virus (HCV) which accounts for one-fourth of all cases of chronic liver disease in India. Transmitted by parenteral and nosocomial routes, it is estimated that there are approximately 12.5 million HCV carriers in our country, and at least a quarter of them are likely to develop chronic liver disease in the next 10 to 15 years (Pal S et al. Current Science 2002, Vol. 83, No. 9)

Patients infected with HCV are currently treated with conventional interferon-2b (IFN-2b) or interferon alfa-2a, either alone or in combination with Ribavirin and these are the only approved drugs of choice. However, only 11-45% of the patients respond to this treatment. Modified forms of IFN, such as Pegylated IFN, etc. are available and have been shown to achieve a more sustained virologic response in chronic hepatitis C patients. Addition of polyethylene glycol (PEG) to IFN produces a product that has significantly longer half-life and favourable pharmacokinetics. This pegylation of IFN reduces the dosage to once a week instead of thrice a week as with normal IFN.

Your company continued to conduct screening camps last year in order to further enhance the awareness of Hepatitis B and Hepatitis C. Your company also organized an Asia Pacific Hepatitis summit which was attended to by reputed physicians, who deliberated on the state of the art treatment of Hepatitis B and Hepatitis C.

RHEUMATOID ARTHRITIS

Rheumatoid arthritis (RA) is the commonest cause of chronic inflammation of the joints all over the world including India. The overall prevalence of the disease is around 1% in the general population. Rheumatoid arthritis (RA) causes significant disability and shortens the lifespan by 10 years. Although RA is considered as a disease of the joints, it can also exhibit a variety of effects on other parts of the human body (extra-articular manifestations). The disease may thus affect not only the joints but also a variety of other major organs.

The signs and symptoms of the disease may follow a variable course and spontaneous disease fluctuations are common. A small percentage of patients may show a reduction of the disease, generally within two years of disease onset. However, most patients will have a progression of the disease eventually leading to considerable functional and physical disability which causes great discomfort to the patient.

PSORIASIS

Psoriasis is a common and chronic condition involving the skin and is associated with inflammation, proliferation and disfigurement. It is associated with significant morbidity, with 20-30% of the patients having severe disease. Both genetic and environmental factors have been known to play an important role in the pathogenesis of this condition. Traditional therapies available do not target the underlying causative factors and only produce clinical improvement of the disease. However, the recent development of biologicals, which aim to arrest the disease by targeting the basic pathogenic process, has made a considerable change to the management of patients with psoriasis. These drugs have the advantage of better therapeutic effects and have been responsible for improving the quality of life in psoriatic patients.

Your Company is involved in developing advanced therapies for the management of Rheumatoid Arthritis and Psoriasis.
