HIGHLIGHTS

A clean slate...

REPORT  junction.com

is what we began with. Plus an inquiring mind and a squeaky if determined, slate pencil - which is our metaphor for a willingness to try every possibility. There was no one to ask, or to follow. We had to find out for ourselves. For instance: about understanding our customers, their views and their priorities. Putting ourselves in their places, and going on from there.

Three decades ago although no one else in the country was in Housing Finance, the importance of caring for our customers in the right way was the first lesson. It took priority. For we have always had much to learn from them - and continue to do so, now, more than thirty years and three million home financing projects later.

for us, has always been uppermost in mind. The different kinds of work concerning homes. That has been our focus all along. True, we were in those days, very aware of the simple arithmetic which says one satisfied client today can multiply into five eager ones tomorrow. But to believe how persuasive the word of mouth can be, one had to see it happen - as we did.

It taught us how vital it is to anticipate our customers' needs. To work out ways by which affordable homes of their own could be a reality, not a dream. Just one instance of several such creative schemes was the Step Up Repayment Facility (SURF) directed towards helping young professionals with relatively low incomes, but with high potential. Consequently, larger loans than normal eligibility considerations would allow, became a reality. All of this came from strong foundations of transparency and trust, foundations which have constantly educated us to experiment further, to make our mistakes - and learn from them.

Graduation,

over the years, has been achieved in different ways, marked by steady, if gradual, growth - until HDFC became the household word it is today - and punctuated by new initiatives, valuable experience and fresh experiments. Branches, outreach programmes, and service centers have been, each in its time, a source of growth and a means of learning by doing.

It has been a continual exercise of keen observation: being aware of and keeping a step ahead of the rapid changes we constantly encounter, particularly in the business environment:

Thinking out of the box teaches us to take nothing for granted; to reinvent ourselves on the basis of what we continually learn. Example: the fun things which HDFC property fairs provide for kids while prospective homemakers look at possible housing. So that whether we come up with ideas for a robotically managed urban apartment, or find equally challenging ways helping a small town grocer with his home loan, we realize anew that awesome academic degrees have to yield to resourcefulness. And our people know the value of thinking on one's feet.

TRAIN THE TRAINERS

at HDFC is a discipline like no other - as our people can testify. It begins with sound corporate values: values, based on a principle-centred approach, built from day one, on fairness, kindness, efficiency and effectiveness. And it continues, through the years. Making communication and an open, creative environment a thriving reality. Making us increasingly sensitive to the needs of our less fortunate fellow citizens.

And so, while we grow as an organisation, with young entrants, young ideas and a fresh outlook, our corporate social responsibility grows with us, impelling us to reach out, to help. And to realize, as achievements bring awards and spur us on to greater effort, the intrinsic truth of the words, that 'the gift is to the giver and comes back most to him.'
