Measuring the Happiness Index

No longer an intangible emotion. No more just a value to be nurtured on a personal basis alone. Happiness is today a core concept for corporates as well as nations, a tangible and measurable goal for growth and advancement.

So what is this concept of 'happiness'? And how does one measure it?

Are we talking about happy people, happy customers or happy investors? Or is it an all encompassing concept that spans each of these segments, and more? Are we referring to 'happy' employees generating greater productivity to bring about an overall sense of well-being? And can it ever be considered a vital measure of a nation's economy?

These are questions we are trying to explore as we chart a roadmap for our future. And in whose answers we are looking for the yardstick by which we can measure the degree of happiness we are extending to each of our stakeholders.

The Happiness index is our way of measuring our impact on the society and the extent of our success. How happy have we made our customers? What is our contribution to the happiness of our farmer families? How do we positively impact the lives of our employees and engender happiness? How happy are our stakeholders? What is the impact that we have made in the communities that we work within?

We believe that money can buy the material things of life, but, love, belonging, self esteem, and the happiness that occurs with self actualisation, are the higher echelons of our well being. We believe in fostering happiness amongst our stakeholder segments as much as we believe in rewarding them financially.

Our purpose is not merely to be the largest, but also be the actuator of the highest level of happiness.

We believe that when we make others happy, we are contributing to our own happiness.

This then is our story

Measuring the Happiness Index.

Management Discussion & Analysis

ECONOMIC OVERVIEW

Amidst the tumultuous global socio-economic climate in 2011-12, India delivered a commendable economic growth of 6.9%. Although this was lower than the previous two years' performances of 8.4% each, and certainly below estimates of close to 9%, it is still strong and India continues to be one of the front runners of global economic growth. The Indian growth story was led by positive movement in the services sector, which grew at 9.4%. Agriculture contributed with a significant 2.5% growth, while industry reported a 3.9% growth rate.

In the year under review, the agriculture sector came in for praise from the Indian Finance Minister in the introductory remarks of his budget speech 2012-13, as he explained how a decline in food inflation, which fell from 20.2% in February 2010 to a negative figure in January 2012, helped to tame overall inflation.

In FY 2012-13, however, the economic outlook and inflation have turned precarious again due to deficient rainfall and deterioration in the situation in Europe. These factors can be expected to push inflation upwards again and economic growth downwards. Consequently, CRISIL Research,
