FUTURE OUTLOOK

The world at large is grappling with the over capacity problem in the steel sector. However Indian Industry is very fragmented and a part of the capacity is inefficient and unviable. The large players were themselves unable to perform well and as a result there was no one with pockets deep enough to drive consolidation. However, the initial indications are that 2002 would be a better year as far as demand is concerned. Of late there has been some revival in the automobile sector. The recovery in the automobile sector is expected to benefit the steel industry. The Government is also talking about pump priming the economy. Any step up in the government expenditure on infrastructure projects is also likely to benefit the steel sector.
