Dear Friends,

"Best Wishes"

The year 2008-09 will be practically full year for the restructured operations. As per the scheme and plans, we will be concentrating on Co-production, Pre-production & Post-production of Animation, Special effects and Distribution of contents.

The coming years will be the decade of merger, demerger and acquisition of various activities and entities which will reduce cost and increase in value addition. There has always been a debate on centralized or distributed systems, vertical or horizontal growth, but all this depends on the environment, groups comfort and market moods. But whatever happens, yours truly believes that except eating & sleeping everything will be in digital right from black boards in schools to large screen in theatres. It means education, enterprise and entertainment will have digital inputs and outputs. Since this has to reach common man audio and video will be a necessity. Your company with a history of having vast digital experience in Software & Entertainment will have to play an important role. This can only be achieved by creatively thinking, thinking creatively and doing passionately. This will require youngsters who should be groomed to deliver the appropriate results. This will necessitate new look & approaches to the structure of the corporates in all aspects of management including assets, investments and R & D efforts. I am sure that as usual we will have your support in achieving this.

Let us hope for a bright edutainment, infotainment and entertainment future.

V. Chandrasekaran

The Management discussion and analysis should be read in conjunction with Company's financial statements included herein and the notes thereto.

Industry Overview

The industry has been growing at a phenomenal rate of over 100 percent in the last few years. However there are a number of challenges and roadblocks which could severely hamper the industry and dampen the over enthusiasm prevailing now.

The industry is currently in an aggressive growth phase. The NASSCOM projections are quite flattering and the domestic industry is also picking up, with over 70 feature projects announced or in production. The challenge faced by the animation industry has been to build and spread awareness about itself, among the youth. There is an acute shortage of skilled labour in the sector, so it is in everyone's interest to pursue grassroots measures. The aggressive growth will no doubt lead to a shake out which will leave the industry consolidated and strengthened. It is important for the industry to ensure that the image of animation and the reality behind it are aligned in such a way that growth can continue for decades to come.

There is virtually no organized financing available for animation production, while bank and financial institutions do not even give a consideration for the requirements of this industry, the equity and venture capital route has its own limitations. There is an urgent need to start an animation finance institution to finance and fund animation projects. There is urgent need of any industry specific association to take up the industry cause.

The animation and Visual FX segment was pegged at Rs.13 billion in 2007, growing by 24% over 2006. Going by the speed at which the industry is expanding, India will need 25,000 more professionals by the close of next year. The industry currently has only a little over 10,000 professionals working in this techno-creative field.

But this is no cause of alarm. Thanks to many institutions that have come up of late to provide animation education, there are now about 100,000 students who are undergoing training in animation, VFX and gaming in different parts of the country. The first batch of these will fill the gap by turning professionals by next year.

The animation industry has a potential in excess of $1 billion and is poised to reach $869 million by 2010, with a compounded annual growth rate of 25% over 2006-2010. This is according to a study by NASSCOM on the animation industry.

Indian Animation Industry

The future of animation content in India is extremely bright. The industry will get a boost after the release of big animation films. Animation companies need to devise smart and fast ways of producing TV content in order for them to make profits.

The Indian animation industry today stands at Rs. 12 billion, and is projected to grow to Rs 42 billion by 2009. Animation in India is currently riding on two key factors - a large base of highly skilled labour, and low cost of production. While the industry is gaining prominence steadily, several important factors such as the government's role in supporting the animation industry, producing original content locally, and the importance of training, will steer the industry to greater heights. India definitely has some advantages and potential to develop the animation industry. Training, investing heavily in the industry, and providing original and compelling content, will be critical to its growth. The encouraging news is that while the primary work coming to India is through animation outsourcing, the industry is moving up to the next level, with some co-production assignments also trickling in - slowly, but surely. As of today, India has about 200 animation, 40 VFX and 35 game development studios, but the country needs more workstations to make optimal use of the potential that the industry has.

Mobile Entertainment

Studios are broadened the reach of its content to more than 200 million potential mobile users worldwide through several key partnerships with top mobile entertainment distributors across the globe. Their content is now available through MobiTV's service in the U.S., Canada and Latin America, through Thumbplay in the United States, and through Buongiorno SpA, Cellfish, Jamster, and Player X in Europe. To meet the needs of huge mobile network, they simultaneously launch an effort to reach out to the creator community and enable them to succeed with their development of mobile content. On the community site, studios now arms creators with necessary guidelines to develop and monetize animated mobile content. Through these guidelines for successfully mobile creation, studios are providing creators with direct market feedback coming from both mobile carrier customers
