The outstanding performance of the Company for the year ended 2006 stemmed from several fronts. The Company continues to make strong margins due to its cost efficient capabilities.

NEW PROJECTS:

FUTURE FOCUS:

The next few years represent an inflection point for Sharon, because to respond to the dynamic global pharmaceutical environment, Sharon has identified a critical growth driver to extend and transform its business model: contract manufacturing of formulations and oncology injectables, with the aim of straddling the entire pharmaceutical value chain right from intermediates on one end to formulations on the other and also to address high value therapeutic segments witnessing phenomenal traction and expected to emerge as future drivers for the pharmaceutical industry. To further add strength to its basket of offerings, the company plans to backward integrate by setting up a USFDA approved plant for the manufacture of oncology APIs, consolidate its presence in cardiovascular, anti-fungal and ulcerant APIs through the set-up of a USFDA standard plant, expand product pipelines by addressing the growing anti-depressant and anti-retro vials therapeutic segments and file DMFs for its key products to expedite entry into the regulated markets of the west.

Sharon's integrated plan is expected to transform it from being a hard-core bulk drug manufacturer to a high-end formulations provider, evolve its business model from a limited margin and opportunity business to a high margin and exponentially growing opportunity space and from a mere vendor to a trusted partner for long-term relationships.

Forward Integration

Forward Integration: Contract Manufacturing: Plant 1

The first step on the company's roadmap of future expansion and forward integration is setting up a formulation plant in Dehradun, Uttaranchal for Contract manufacturing for tablets, capsules and injectables. The project work is in full swing and the company expects to start the production from December 2006.

Rationale and opportunity outlook

The company's prudent foray into contract manufacturing of formulations is vindicated by the following statistics :

- Molecules worth an estimated USD 75 bn will go off patent between the years 2007-10 qualifying them for generic manufacture.
- Demand for low-cost formulations is growing at a rapid pace across the world with world consumption of generics slated to grow by almost 12 per cent between 2004-08, taking the global generic market to USD 64 bn.
- Excessive overcrowding in the generics space has translated into a number of product originators intensively focussing on their core competence of discovery, development, branding, marketing of products while outsourcing manufacturing and development to low cost regions competent in carrying out multi-product development.
